Palestinians have aspiration, not right, to East Jerusalem capital

At the UN, Trump envoy notes Israel 'has already conceded 88% of territory' it captured in defensive war of 1967, says US plan won't be based on 'fictions of international consensus'

The forthcoming US peace plan will not be based on “fictions of international consensus” or on international law, the Trump administration’s Middle East peace envoy Jason Greenblatt said Tuesday.

Greenblatt also said that while the Palestinians may aspire to a capital in Jerusalem, they do not have a right to

one. “It is true that the PLO and the Palestinian Authority continue to assert that East Jerusalem must be a capital for the Palestinians,” Greenblatt said. “But let’s remember, an aspiration is not a right.”

Addressing the United Nations Security Council, Greenblatt flatly rejected the notion that international law must serve as the foundation of any future peace deal, arguing that the two sides differ in their interpretation of it.

Likewise, a final-status treaty cannot be based on past UN resolutions that are “vague” and have failed to produce a result until today, the Trump envoy maintained.

“International consensus is not international law. So let’s stop kidding ourselves,” he said, speaking at the Security Council’s regularly scheduled session on the “situation in the Middle East.”

“If a so-called international consensus had been able to resolve the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, it would have done so decades ago. It didn’t.”

Greenblatt also dismissed statements about an international consensus on the status of Jerusalem, saying that no resolution will ever get the US to deny that the city will forever be Israel’s capital.

He further noted that Israel has “already conceded” more than three-quarters of the territory it captured in the 1967 Six Day War, referring to the Israeli pullouts from the Sinai Peninsula and Gaza Strip.

The Israeli-Palestinian conflict will not be resolved by references to international law, which is “inconclusive,” Greenblatt went on.

“We have all heard cogent arguments claiming international law says one thing or another about this or that aspect of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. Some of those arguments are persuasive, at least to certain audiences. But none of them are conclusive,” he said.

It is impossible to determine whose interpretation of international law is correct, he argued.

“There is no judge, jury, or court in the world that the parties involved have agreed to give jurisdiction in order to decide whose interpretations are correct.”

Greenblatt made the remarks only minutes after UN Under-Secretary-

General for Political and Peacebuilding Affairs Rosemary DiCarlo invoked international law and UN resolutions in her briefing to the council.

“We must work together to bring Israelis and Palestinians back to the negotiating table in order to resolve the conflict on the basis of international law, relevant UN resolutions and previous agreements,” she said.

One could either argue endlessly about the law and prolong the suffering of the people in the region, Greenblatt said, or “acknowledge the futility” of such an approach.

“This conflict will not be resolved by constantly referencing the hundreds of UN resolutions on the issue. The constant reference to these heavily negotiated, purposely ambiguously worded resolutions is nothing more than a cloak to avoid substantive debate about the realities on the ground and the complexity of the conflict.”

The same is true for the status of Jerusalem, Greenblatt said.

“There is no international consensus about Jerusalem. And, no international consensus or interpretation of international law will persuade the United States or Israel that a city in which Jews have lived and worshipped for nearly 3,000 years and has been the capital of the Jewish State for 70 years, is not — today and forever — the capital of Israel.”

On December 6, 2017, US President Donald Trump became the first world leader to formally recognize Jerusalem as Israel’s capital, though he stressed the administration was not taking a position on the city’s boundaries. “We must work together to bring Israelis and Palestinians back to the negotiating table in order to resolve the conflict on the basis of international law, relevant UN resolutions and previous agreements,” she said.

The USA Justice Department
Reviewing the Practices of Market-
Leading Online Platforms

“[The] Review Focuses on Practices that Create or Maintain Structural Impediments to Greater Competition and User Benefits.

The Department of Justice announced today that the Department's Antitrust Division is reviewing whether and how market-leading online platforms have achieved market power and are engaging in practices that have reduced competition, stifled innovation, or otherwise harmed consumers.

The Department's review will consider the widespread concerns that consumers, businesses, and entrepreneurs have expressed about search, social media, and some retail services online. The Department's Antitrust Division is conferring with and seeking information from the public, including industry participants who have direct insight into competition in online platforms, as well as others.

“Without the discipline of meaningful market-based competition, digital platforms may act in ways that are not responsive to consumer demands,” said Assistant Attorney General Makan Delrahim of the Antitrust Division. “The Department's antitrust review will explore these important issues.”

The goal of the Department's review is to assess the competitive conditions in the online marketplace in an objective and fair-minded manner and to ensure Americans have access to free markets in which companies compete on the merits to provide services that users want. If violations of law are identified, the Department will proceed appropriately to seek redress.”

Facebook Accepts FTC imposed $5 Billion Penalty and Sweeping New Privacy Sharing Restrictions

To settle a Federal Trade Commission charges against it, Facebook, Inc. will pay a record-breaking $US5 billion penalty, submit to new restrictions and a modified corporate structure that will hold the company accountable for the decisions it makes about its users' privacy. The FTC charged that the company violated a 2012 FTC order by deceiving users. “Despite repeated promises to its billions of users worldwide that they could control how their personal information is shared, Facebook undermined consumers' choices,” said FTC Chairman Joe Simons.

Facebook encourage users to share information on its platform while its tactics allowed the company to share users' personal information with third-party apps that were downloaded by the user's Facebook “friends.”

The FTC alleges that many users were unaware that Facebook was sharing such information, and therefore did not take the steps needed to opt-out of sharing. Facebook monetizes user information through targeted advertising, which generated most of the company's $55.8 billion in revenues in 2018.
