- Freedom Day - Thousands descended on Australian capital cities

By Alexandra Marshall July 24, 2021

RebelNews.com -

<https://tinyurl.com/yyb7455y>

Thousands of protestors have descended on Australia's capital cities as part of the international Freedom Day movement.

The Sydney lockdown has been interrupted by an anti-lockdown protest rolling through the CBD on Saturday.

Residents marched against NSW Premier Gladys Berejiklian and the health measures put in place to control the Delta variant of Covid.

Hundreds turned into thousands as the Freedom Protest moved from Victoria Park in Camperdown toward Hyde Park. Several arrests were made.

In the past twenty-four hours, 250 fines have been handed out in NSW for breaking public health orders with police scolding people for attending small birthday gatherings.

The Freedom Rally, and those like it across the world, are a demonstration of frustration against mandatory lockdowns and restrictions related to Covid. Many involved have been left without work or government support. Others are furious at the erasure of civil liberties.

"NSW Police support the right to free speech but the first priority is public health," said a police spokesman, speaking with the ABC.

Organisers of the Freedom Rally applied for a permit but were rejected by NSW Police.

Heavy-handed policing resulted in protestors throwing items at mounted police when the rally ended up in a choke outside Town Hall. Barricades were made by police across George Street and the unauthorised event blocked traffic until descending into a brawl with police when it reached Hyde Park.

Sydney has been in lockdown for four weeks with no end in sight as Berejiklian insists on a 'Covid-Zero' approach that is not being pursued by any other major nation in the world except New Zealand.

The protestors demanded 'freedom!' as they made their way through various Covid hotspots. Under current regulations, only those employed in essential work are allowed to leave their homes for work.

Signs also read, 'Drop your mask, raise your voice!' 'I am not a bio-hazard' and 'My rights are essential!'

Another protestor climbed onto the roof of a Woolworths to hold up a sign reading, 'Western Sydney Lives Matter' in a reference to the Black Lives Matter protests which the government has previously allowed to go ahead during other lockdowns.

Similar protests are underway in Brisbane and [Melbourne] Victoria.

"Protest against this virus by staying at home, following the rules and getting out of lockdown," said Victorian Premier Daniel Andrews.

The Daily Mail referred to the protesters as, "Frenzied crowds shouting 'freedom' and anti-vaccine conspiracy slogans swarmed Haymarket in the city centre from midday on Saturday, just moments after NSW Health's Jeremy McAnulty declared the area a virus hotspot."

However, those interviewed at the scene expressed their desperation as rolling lockdowns send ordinary Australians into debt and mental anguish.

This comes only days after a leaked video showed Daily Mail editor Barclay Crawford saying that, "We'll keep trying to run stories that call out the anti-vax weirdos."

Protests have traditionally been seen as an unshakeable civil right.

'We live in a democracy and normally I am certainly one who supports people's right to protest, but I actually think it is really silly,' said NSW Health Minister, Brad Hazzard.

NSW Chief Health Officer Dr Chant has recently been ridiculed for telling Sydney residents 'not to talk to each other' as new restrictions were brought in.

Despite headlines in other publications, the Freedom Protest is not an 'anti-vax' event, it is a political movement against government overreach during the Covid pandemic attended by a wide variety of concerned communities.

NSW Police blow whistle on coronavirus deception

NOV 2 Posted by Editor, cairnsnews

A LETTER written by a senior constable from the Coffs/Clarence Highway Patrol in NSW and signed by colleagues, has exposed the COVID-19 narrative for its deception and the harm it is causing to police and their relations with the public.

For police to raise this within their own ranks may be portrayed as controversial but the action is consistent with common law enforcement, e.g. investigating, exposing and prosecuting a crime of deception carried out against the public.

FDA Wants to Ban Another Natural Supplement with Success in Treating COVID-19 Symptoms.

Why the FDA is Attacking NAC Supplements?

by Alliance for Natural Health

Excerpts:

N-acetyl-L-cysteine (NAC) has been on the market as a supplement for decades—why is the FDA attacking it now?

A few weeks ago, we told you about the FDA's recent actions threatening NAC supplements — products which the FDA has allowed on the market for decades.

The question is, why now, after all these years, is the FDA doing this?

Digging a bit deeper, it seems obvious that the FDA is clearing the market of affordable NAC supplements in an effort to eliminate competition for NAC drugs that could be coming to market in the next few years.

If our suspicions are correct, this would be another outrageous example of the FDA doing Big Pharma's dirty work.

To briefly recap how we got here: In a slew of warning letters sent last year, the FDA targeted a number of supplement companies marketing “unapproved” cures for hangovers—which the agency absurdly considers to be a “disease.”

Some of these products contain NAC. In the letters to those companies, the FDA states that NAC does not meet the legal definition of a supplement because it was approved as a drug in 1963; according to federal law, any substance approved as a drug before it was sold as a supplement cannot be sold as a supplement. All of this means that the status of NAC as a supplement is currently in dispute.

So, why is the FDA threatening NAC now, during a pandemic when a new FDA commissioner hasn't even been appointed? For starters, a drug company is investigating NAC as a treatment for a rare genetic disorder that damages the myelin sheath, which insulates nerve cells in the brain. The Phase 1 trial was completed in March 2020.

But that's just the beginning. A search through the government's clinical trials database shows considerable interest from the pharmaceutical industry in NAC. There are 17 trials looking at NAC, in both drug and supplement form, in the treatment of COVID.

Additionally, there are over 50

trials looking at NAC for a variety of other conditions, including: autism spectrum disorder, obsessive compulsive disorder, alcohol abuse disorder, rhinosinusitis, bronchiolitis, cardiac arrhythmia, and more.

Note that NAC drugs are currently available in generic form since it is off-patent, but a company could bring a new branded NAC drug to market if it was proven effective for an additional indication.

Given these facts, it seems reasonable to assume that the FDA is setting the stage for a new NAC drug to come to market by removing the competition from much cheaper NAC supplements.

We called it when the FDA pulled a similar move a few years back when they went after brain health supplements, trying to clear the market for a new Alzheimer's drug—culminating in the recent approval of an Alzheimer's treatment that many experts think is not effective.

CBD supplements may face a similar fate if Congress does not force the FDA's hand by legalizing CBD in dietary supplements.

It is critically important to maintain access to affordable NAC supplements. In a recent interview with the Life Extension Foundation, Dr. Daniel Amen noted that NAC “has shown promising results in people with bipolar disorder, schizophrenia, OCD, and addictions.

It can also decrease inflammation and may help delay brain atrophy in Alzheimer's disease.” NAC protects the body from toxins, is a selective immune system enhancer, and helps remove free radicals, which contribute to neurogenerative diseases and aging. In Europe, NAC is a prescription medicine used to reduce congestion.

NAC is also a precursor to glutathione, one of the body's most important antioxidants. Glutathione plays crucial roles in nutrient metabolism and the regulation of many cellular events (such as gene expression, protein synthesis, cell proliferation, and more); glutathione deficiency contributes to oxidative stress, which is implicated in the development of many diseases: Alzheimer's, Parkinson's, liver disease, HIV, heart attack, cancer, stroke, and diabetes. Note that acetaminophen depletes glutathione, so those who regularly take it should consider, in consultation with an integrative doctor, supplementing with NAC to replenish glutathione levels. In fact, NAC is routinely used in hospitals to counteract acetaminophen toxicity. NAC is far too important to be threatened by the FDA, especially under such dubious circumstances.
