This plan was actioned in 2016/2017 by the WHO.

It involves all state premiers in Australia being told that the Public Health Dept will be planning to vaccinate 95% of the Australian population, gather up all our DNA and hook us all up to a Biometric Digital ID Pass System. With all that personal data to be handed over to the WHO.

It was signed off in 2018. Its set for completion in 2023.

Which means none of us will be allowed out of our homes until every single one of us has been vaxxed. It's part of the IHR agreement that was signed in 2005 that activated the “pan-corona” measures. The IHR is a Public Private Partnership deal with 196 nations that agrees to ensure that International Trade and Commerce traffic is not disrupted during a WHO declared emergency.

This is why we are locked in our homes. Its to keep us out of Mr Globalists way.

Its looks like the IHR has been hijacked and corrupted by the Globalists and is why we are being driven into the ground by unlawful activity and stealth. It's being used as a WMD using a pen.

All the people need to demand the PM ScoMo immediately withdraw from the IHR agreement and corona will cease to exist for Australia.

The Corona pandemic was declared to facilitate the nations to implement their NAPHS plan, that's all. There is no real pandemic. It is simple treason. Subsidiarity defeats Totalitarianism

(Edited excerpts, with permission, from "Different Essays" by C.E.Pinwill)

Subsidiarity effectively means; "Don't ask an emperor to do what the man next door can handle, and don't establish a world government to get the potholes outside your front door fixed."

The principle is to keep government and all effective decision-making as close to the grass roots as it is possible to handle it.

Mongrel dogs [think Hillary's Deplorables] will love this big word and they don't have to be able to pronounce it.

In many respects, the Australian Constitution did a fair job with this "subsidiarity" business. The States have retained many functions; local governments fix the local roads, the judiciary controls the courts, and the politicians make legislation. Our head of state, the Governor- General, might be able to sack a government if it acted outside the Constitution, but he gets no say at all on what colour you paint your front door. So far so good.

The level closest to the grass roots is the people themselves; they are the grass roots. Subsidiarity says that where the people are capable of controlling something, they should have this responsibility. But the founding fathers, themselves politicians, almost forgot us.

In effect, we got the right to choose the politicians that the political parties preselected for us, and we got the right to agree when the politicians wanted to change the constitution to give themselves more power. Mostly we didn't agree.

One thing is absent here. No matter what we the people want, or how badly we want it, or how important it is to us, of ourselves we can do nothing. Every decision we ever get to make is first initiated by politicians.

We all appear to be trained to vote for one set of politicians because we fear the others more. There is no trouble in getting Australians to agree that all politicians are pitiable and pathetic creatures who betray their election promises, gouge the public purse, and send our beloved country down the river in innumerable ways.

But in spite of this self-evident and well acknowledged truth, 50 per cent of us are always terrified that the other mob will get in. “Oh dear! Please not that!” But of course, exactly that always happens, because our politicians of all colours are so unbearable that we just can't stand any of them for long. We go from one debacle to another, but we can't quite think how to stop.

There has only ever been one party in Australia. How come? Because all parties have always had the one core belief which they have never faulted. They all hold to the unshakeable opinion that on any and every issue whatsoever, 50 per cent of them will always know better than 50 per cent of the people.

Ours is the sort of democracy in which we are never given a say on what we can have a say on. We can choose between candidates of their choosing, and sometimes vote on referendums, but this is only the case regarding things that they want. We can never get a say on what we can have a say on. But there is a way. It is called the Voters' Veto, which is a referendum that is initiated by the voters. If 5 per cent petition for a referendum, then the politicians can't stop a referendum being held, and moreover, the majority decision overrules the politicians. Some laws are made, and some are overruled by the people, and the “people's law” trumps both Parliament and the politicians every time. But surely that can't work? In what is one of the best-kept political secrets, Switzerland has continuously employed this system for over one hundred years, and they love it. Over twenty states in the United States have it, and Canadian local governments have it, and they, too, love it.

Australian democracy operates a bit differently. We always get a choice between one lot of despots who refuse to give us a say on issues, and another lot of despots who also refuse to give us a say. We always vote against the despots we don't like and for the ones who we do like, even though they too don't give us a say. The results are always the same, but we have so little interest in politics that we're struggling to notice.

Without breaking any bones or bruising any bodies, we have got to find a way of knocking our politicians down... The only violence we need to do is to the politicians' tenure in office.

That is why I suggest that the only way is to put every sitting member last. We need to stand up and knock all politicians down. Their brains definitely work best when they are on their knees.

They will work it out once they know that only supporting the voters' veto can save them, and that over 10 per cent of their electors are mongrel dogs. It takes 50 per cent to elect any politician, but it takes only a 10 per cent swing to defeat one.

What we really have to fear is more of the same. We are losing it and have no means of saying “stop”. Only voting like mongrel dogs can save us now. Fortune belongs to the brave, and mongrel dogs always Put all sitting members last!

Qld cops, teachers and nurses speak out in defiance of Covid mandates

The Queensland Police Union ...like a lot of others that has become part and parcel of the Queensland Labor Party government.

Perhaps the most outstanding, recent example of union and government solidarity was in Melbourne when many thousands of paid-up CFMEU members took to the streets in defiance of the corrupt Daniels' regime of forced jobs and the union's leadership being in bed with the corrupt Premier Andrew Daniels. Melbourne is now proving to be a Chinese Communist Party enclave after it was discovered last year the Victoria Labor Party was in solid partnership with the Chinese government.

Speaking on the podium with leader of Katters Australian Party, Robbie Katter, veteran cop Phil Nataro was scathing of the union which he said was once a very powerful body.

He said it was none of the government's business if he was vaccinated or not. "I shouldn't have to tell anyone if I am vaccinated or not, it's a personal choice," Mr Nataro told the news conference.

"That's what this is all about. Now we have unprecedented bullying and segregation in the police force and it needs to stop and someone in the executive leadership team has to grow a head and say enough is enough. You can't keep doing this to your members."

Representing the Teachers Union Tracy Tully and nurse Margaret Gilbert also castigated the Labor government for forcing union members out of their jobs over a lack of informed consent. Ms Tully said the Public Service in Queensland and Australia was abusing its power and the Westminster system of government.

"They are not following the rules and regulations and they must consult comprehensively and they must provide risk assessment which they are not doing."

Citing the hypocrisy of the current double standards when the Premier refuses to mandate the jab for politicians.

Mr Katter said all levels of government had pushed the boundaries on individual choice, personal freedom and civic liberties over the last 18 months in the name of the pandemic.

He said one of the worst examples was elected leaders' silence on the COVID-19 vaccine mandate for State's 15,000-strong police workforce and 90,000 Queensland Health employees. "In particular we have an issue with the way people's employment and their fundamental need to earn an income has been used coercively to demand they comply.

"Yet at the same the requirements that have been forced on to our police, our nurses and health care workers, possibly our teachers and many in the private sector, are not required of politicians. Mr Katter said if the Parliament was unwilling to mandate vaccines for politicians, it should immediately ban double-jabs being required for other workers. Source: <https://tinyurl.com/5nkkhjre>
