Netanyahu's rival Benny Gantz appointed to form Israeli government coalition

Kehila News Israel - Oct 24, 2019
<https://tinyurl.com/y6jqxux4>

Netanyahu finally gave the mandate back to the president, two days before his time was up. According to a spokesman of president Rivlin's office, the mandate will now be given to Benny Gantz. He has 28 days to form a coalition.

This is the third time in Israel's history that a candidate for the post of prime minister fails in building a coalition, but it's the first time it happens after elections.

Israel's politics is known for its volatility and instability.

In the 1996 elections, they tried to stabilize the system by voting directly for the prime minister. This change did not, however, bring the stability that many wished for. Instead, it weakened the large parties and strengthened the small ones, bringing more instability to the system. It was eventually abandoned in the early 2000's.

Now the question is raised again, and some want the law to automatically appoint the leader of the biggest party as prime minister. That would move more people to vote for the bigger parties and hopefully bring more stability to the system. On the other hand, some believe that the existing system with many small parties is a better and more correct representation of Israel's diverse population, and it should be maintained at all costs.

If Gantz fails during these 28 days, the mandate goes out of the president's hand and is given to the Knesset. The Knesset then has 21 days to create a government or the law demands new elections.

A high ranking official from the Likud party, David Bitan, said to Channel 12 News that he assumes that this is when the government will be formed, not before, because "by then, there will no longer be any party blocs." He added that "during those 21 days everyone will be under pressure, the party blocs will be gone, and everyone will be ready to do what it takes to avoid new elections." When asked what they will do, he said he didn't want to go into details or "give anyone ideas." When they pressed him on the idea that there won't be any blocs anymore, he said that "in those 21 days, the blocs will not look like they do today, and then it will be possible to form a government."

Half an hour after that interview, the Likud party published a ban on all party members to give interviews to the media.

Gantz has said that he is optimistic, but he doesn't seem to have many options. As long as neither Likud nor anyone else from the right bloc joins him, the only option he has is to form a minority government with Liberman and Labor with passive support from the Democratic Union and the Arab Joint List, or parts of it (some members of the Joint List will never support an Israeli general). It would be a very temporary government with the only goal of toppling Netanyahu. He would also want to keep the Democratic Union and the Joint List at an arm's length in order to convince parts of the right bloc to join him. Once that government is established, Gantz will hope for Netanyahu to be convicted in court for bribery charges, and then smaller right-wing parties might be ready to join him. But even if that doesn't succeed, and the Netanyahu-led opposition topples him, Gantz will come to the 2020 elections as the sitting prime minister, having weakened Netanyahu significantly.

New York Times Shifts from the 'Deep State Doesn't Exist' to the Deep State's Awesome

Brightbart - John Nolte - Oct 2019
<https://tinyurl.com/yxgzd24w>

After years of denials, the far-left New York Times has finally admitted the Deep State is real, and that it is a glorious institution staffed with patriots who are just doing their duty.

“President Trump is right,” writes Michelle Cottle, a Times editorial board member. “The deep state is alive and well. But it is not the sinister, antidemocratic cabal of his fever dreams. It is, rather, a collection of patriotic public servants — career diplomats, scientists, intelligence officers and others — who, from within the bowels of this corrupt and corrupting administration, have somehow remembered that their duty is to protect the interests, not of a particular leader, but of the American people.”

And there you go...

Keep in mind, this is the same New York Times that back in March of 2017 ran a headline about Trump that said, “What Happens When You Fight a ‘Deep State’ That Doesn’t Exist.”

It was only a couple of months ago when the far-left Washington Post finally confessed to the reality of a Deep State and did the exact same thing... Told us how incredibly awesome it is.

Have you noticed how this always works the same way with Donald Trump...?

What I mean is, Trump will fire off an accusation, the media freak immediately out over it and declare Trump a lying, un-American conspiracy theorist; and then after the accusation is revealed as valid, the media end up admitting Trump was correct, but that it’s no big deal.

It works like this...

Anyone who believes the Deep State exists is a stupid rube spreading conspiracy theories!

To... Okay, there’s a Deep State, but it’s glorious and necessary.

Or... How dare Trump accuse the Obama administration of spying on him!

To...Okay, yes, the Obama administration spied on Trump and for that we should all be grateful.

Or... How dare Trump try to scare everyone into passing his legislation with phony claims about a crisis along the border!

To... Why doesn’t Trump do something about this crisis on the border!

Or... Trump smearing Hunter Biden without evidence is McCarthyism!

To... This evidence against Hunter Biden could hurt Joe Biden.

Nevertheless, even by its own laudatory definition of a Deep State, the Times is still admitting the Deep State is un-American, un-democratic, and at war with the American people.

This sentence right here gives the whole game away: “Those who refuse to silently indulge this president’s worst impulses qualify as heroes — and deserve our gratitude.”

[I]t is not the job of unelected bureaucrats and civil servants, people who can never be fired or held accountable, to decide what is and is not a “worst impulse.”

These bureaucrats have one job, and that is to honor the democratic process by instituting the agenda of the American president.

When the Deep State betrays Trump, the Deep State is actually betraying America... In the only nationwide vote this country takes, we chose Trump, and by extension, his policies and vision for the country. The idea that a secret, faceless cabal of unaccountable bureaucrats can betray our vote is appalling and un-American.

It is up to the voters to decide which “worst impulses” are indeed worst impulses, not the Deep State.

The Pathocracy of the Deep State: Tyranny at the Hands of a Psychopathic Government

By John W. Whitehead - Oct. 22, 2019 from <https://tinyurl.com/yxgzd24w>

“Politicians are more likely than people in the general population to be sociopaths... That a small minority of human beings literally have no conscience was and is a bitter pill for our society to swallow — but it does explain a great many things, shamelessly deceitful political behavior being one.”—Dr. Martha Stout, clinical psychologist and former instructor at Harvard Medical School

Once psychopaths gain power, the result is usually some form of totalitarian government or a pathocracy. “At that point, the government operates against the interests of its own people except for favoring certain groups,” author James G. Long in Road to Pathocracy here <https://tinyurl.com/nsyn76z>

The willingness to prioritize power above all else, including the welfare of their fellow human beings, ruthlessness, callousness and an utter lack of conscience are among the defining traits of the sociopath.
